The ability to change the culture of an organization from 'same old' to the 'restless quest for excellence' which is the mark of a Lean organization is primarily dependent upon leadership. Effective management is necessary as well, but leadership has qualities that require abilities that are beyond effectiveness.

In this presentation, we will discuss the seven requirements for effective leadership and the priorities for success in leading the change to Lean. This session is of interest to anyone that is, or will be, involved in leading change and continuous improvement projects within an organization.

Ken Cowman
